

Sixteenth Sunday in Ordinary Time July 21, 2019

Dear Members and Friends of St. Mary's/
St. Patrick's, and St. Peter's Cathedral:

Today's Old Testament account of the three mysterious visitors to Abraham has been understood through the centuries by Christians as a revelation of the Holy Trinity. In the Eastern Orthodox tradition the Holy Trinity is often depicted in icons as the three angelic visitors to Abraham. The location of Mamre, near the city of Hebron in the southern part of the West Bank, is, not surprisingly, the site of a Russian Orthodox monastery.

In the Western Church the image is not used quite as much, but the fact that Abraham receives three mysterious visitors (not one or two!) is for us also a revelation of the trinitarian nature of God. And there is no doubt at the end of the story that the visitors are divine, for one of them promises Abraham that Sarah will have a son within the year. God visits Abraham to repeat the promise that he will have a legitimate son, through whom God will fulfill his promise to make Abraham the father of many nations. He trusts this unlikely promise (he and Sarah are old!) and thus he becomes 'our father in faith,' as he is named in Eucharistic Prayer 1, the Roman canon.

God makes himself known and he makes promises that are trustworthy. Few beliefs are more central to the Christian faith than that. He makes himself known through St. Paul who sees his sufferings as "filling up what is lacking in the afflictions of Christ" and thus reminds us that our sufferings unite us to Jesus.

God makes himself known when Jesus in the Gospel reminds Martha and us to seek the one thing we really need, the Lord himself. He makes himself known in the Gospel for today's Latin Mass, the feeding of the multitude. That and the hospitality of Abraham point to the Eucharist, where the Lord makes himself known and available. The intimacy with God that we see in the visit of the three divine beings to Abraham is ours in the Mass.

At my visit to Penn on July 10, day 92 post-transplant, I learned that the staff had decided to make that the equivalent to day 100 and to begin tapering off the dosage of the anti-rejection drug. If all goes according to plan, the last day will be September 19. As the drug is tapered off my energy level should improve, although I will at that point need to be alert to any symptoms of rejection. Those too can be managed and are not a sign that the transplant has failed. Since my energy is already improving little by little, I have scheduled myself for one Mass a day beginning at the end of July and will begin also to spend more time in the office.

I thank you for the prayers that have helped to make this journey far less arduous than I ever had reason to expect.

Word of Life

"As a mom who had my first baby in college, I know that an unexpected pregnancy can sometimes bring fear, shame, and doubt. However, I also know that an unexpected pregnancy can bring joy, excitement, awe, gratitude, and deeper love than I knew was possible—not to mention the little bundle who inspires these sentiments!"
